Register now for a virtual session where Northern Queensland Primary Health Network (NQPHN) will share the recent codesign findings and details on an upcoming process to procure a new network of mental health stepped care service providers for 2024-25.

Across the northern Queensland region, NQPHN commissions mental health stepped care services to support people with low, moderate, and high intensity mental health needs.

In 2022, NQPHN undertook an independent review of these services that recommended a redesign process focused on improving access, transitions in care, and integration.

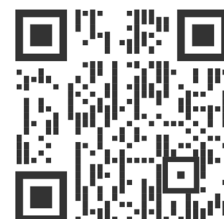

Since February 2023, NQPHN has been engaging with health professionals and community members to codesign a new model of stepped care services, including:

- 15 codesign workshops
- three GP focus groups
- more than 25 meetings with a range of stakeholders

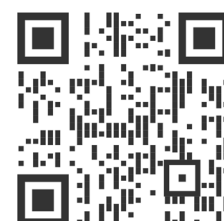

In August we'll share a final snapshot of our findings from codesign, and details on an upcoming process to procure a new network of mental health stepped care service providers. The new service model will commence 1 July 2024
